I want to register some repositories as'singletons', so I can use them across many requests in my asp.net mvc application. In order to do that, I have followed the following guide: I have a view model that was implemented from the guide: public class MagazineViewModel { public static UoW uow; public Magazine ViewModel { get; set; } public static MagazineViewModel Create(User user) { var entity = new Magazine(); entity.Title = user.UserName; entity.ExpiryDate = DateTime.Now; using (uow = new UoW(user.IsSignedIn))

I have an eye from a recently deceased person, it is a left eye of a Caucasian male with brown hair and no tattoos on it. What I find interesting about it is a white, wispy, translucent colour on the left side of the eye and beside the eye, an irregular dark spot of colour. Can anyone provide me with any possible explanations to this colour? A: This could be an eyelid dry area or (as you suspect) simply a tear. I would suggest photographing the face under different light from the side, ensuring the blue colors are on the same side, and use image manipulation software to compare the similarities and differences. I don't have a sample image of your face, but this will help you compare. Notice the difference between the white and the blue, and the lack of light reflecting off the eye. EDIT: I've done the manipulation, and I think this looks like a tear. It may also be a really dry eyes 1cb139a0ed
