Recent research findings suggest that apolipoprotein E (ApoE) plays an important role in inflammation. Our preliminary data show that ApoE deficiency results in a decrease of Acute Phase proteins expression (APP) in the liver. We further demonstrated that upon challenge with murine LPS, ApoE deficient mice exhibit increased cytokine production and increased mortality. Based on these data, we hypothesize that ApoE modulates the expression of APP and thus, in turn, regulates the inflammatory response. The following Specific Aims will test this hypothesis. First, we will characterize the effect of ApoE knockout on APP expression and cytokine production by isolated primary hepatocytes. Second, we will study the impact of ApoE on inflammation after LPS challenge in the ApoE gene knockout mice. Third, we will investigate the role of the APOE receptor LRP1 in inflammation. Fourth, we will evaluate whether chronic hepatic inflammatory disease is associated with altered APP expression. This proposal constitutes a comprehensive analysis of a novel role of ApoE in inflammation. Understanding the mechanism for the regulation of APP production by ApoE may help in understanding the pathogenesis of acute and chronic inflammatory diseases.

Pheochromocytoma: the impact of long term hypertension on quality of life. Patients with pheochromocytomas are frequently hypertensive, and in a minority of patients the secretory activity of these tumors can lead to a sustained hypertension. Pheochromocytomas are rare, and because of the lack of a universal screening protocol, the diagnosis is often delayed. The long term impact of a pheochromocytoma on quality of life is still poorly documented. The aim of this study was to assess quality of life in patients with long term hypertension due to a pheochromocytoma and to evaluate the role of blood
