The purpose of this study was to investigate the efficiency of pre-formed collagenated multilamellar liposomes (CL) compared with simple multilamellar liposomes (SM) in the transfection of human hepatocellular carcinoma HepG2 cell line with plasmid DNA encoding for human interleukin 2 (IL-2) gene. The in vitro transfection efficiency of CL was highly enhanced compared with uncoated SM and completely different from other non-cationic gene delivery systems with a defined size, polydispersity and surface charge. Inhibition experiments using neutralized polylysine and polyethyleneimine showed that the presence of cationic polymers was essential for efficient gene transfer. Gel retardation assay confirmed that the enhanced transfection efficiency of CL was due to the release of the DNA from the liposome. A remarkable decrease in the endotoxic activity of CL was observed. Fluorescent microscopy analysis of fluorescent membrane stainings showed that IL-2 transfected HepG2 cells had sustained stable levels of expression of IL-2 during 7 days. These data clearly demonstrate that a pre-formed collagenated multilamellar liposome is a good candidate for gene therapy.Q: Can we read Chinese characters on JHipster? Is there a way for JHipster to read Chinese characters? If yes, how? A: You can configure the database to use UTF-8 to support all supported languages.
